

OOPS, WE DELETED THE EMAILS

About three years ago I was at HR Block getting my taxes done. The tax guy started to ask me questions of a personal nature, stating that it was some sort of survey that Block was conducting. He also said that the IRS had some involvement in the process too. I sort of got angry and stated that I didn't want to give out the information. But then a bolt hit me from out of the blue. I realized that governmental agencies like the IRS and many others probably knew more about me than I know about myself. I'm sure that if they pooled all of the information that they have on all of their computers they could write a nice biography of my life, or a not so nice biography, depending on which side of the spiritual fence you stand.

Over the years we have heard that the government has ways to get information off of a hard drive that has been "cleaned." There are companies who, for a hefty price, will get the information off of a dead hard drive. When it comes to information, nothing is ever really gone. Many times, on the news we hear about sex offenders having their hard drives read to retrieve information to bring them to trial. When the SEALs raided Obama's, oops, Osama's compound, the first thing that they take is the computers along with the hard drives. Even if encoded with the most advanced encoding software, someone somewhere can get the information off of those drives. Point to drive home is that anyone who says that their emails were lost is a blatant liar.

There once was a woman names Lois

And now Congress can't send her to jail

The now ineffectual Congress of the United States has subpoenaed Lois for her email and of course, they have become lost, gone, deleted. Now they have called in the experts, who are stating that emails can indeed be lost. Well, how come they can know all about me, on multi-redundant systems, yet this woman's emails, which might implicate the greatest liar after Satan himself, are lost in the ether forever and ever. I am sure that when Lois came under the scrutiny of Congress, and the truth could come about targeting conservatives by the IRS, a group of government I.T. professionals scoured every source to find those emails and to either kill them forever, or hide them so that nobody but Yahweh Himself could ever find them.

This isn't meant to be a long posting on this blog. I merely want to affirm that the present administration has again tried to pull the wool over the eyes of Americans. Those of us who have a lick of sense know that it's a lie, because that is what this administration seems so adept at doing, LYING. They have taken CYA to a whole new dimension. They've been lying for so long that libtards and the likes of libtards believe them; lock, stock and barrel.

I have a friend who is an I.T. professional. I asked him about the possibility of losing emails like we are being told has happened. Here is his response. I'll not need to add anything afterward because his words say it all.

As a System Admin in I.T who does enterprise backup and storage for a living I can tell you right now they are lying. Email data is not stored on a single hard drive that can fail and be lost. That type of data would be stored on storage systems that have built in redundancy that can experience many hard drive failures without losing that data. On top of that they would have standard backup and archive of this data scheduled that would exist onsite with backup tapes and offsite backup tapes of that data as well. Most places also keep what they call a mail archiver that archives every single piece of mail and keeps it for 5-10 years it is the law. We have to hold to this standard then they should as well. The idea that this type of data would be stored on single drive like is just dumb.
